Motorists will see 'cost of road tax climb' from Monday with some drivers to pay £600

New Vehicle Excise Duty \(VED\) car tax fees set to be introduced on Monday will "stretch household finances" with some motorists set to pay over £600, according to finance specialists.

Petrol and diesel owners will be impacted across the board with VED fees set to rise in line with the Retail Price Index (RPI) from April 1, 2024.

Bradley Post, Managing Director of finance experts RIFT, stressed motorists will be hit in the pocket by the changes with fees expected to rise by six percent.

The standard rate for petrol and diesel models built after 2017 is predicted to rise by just £10.

However, models registered before 2017 will be affected by a sliding scale of charges with higher fees for those emitting more pollution.
