

College lecturers in Scotland could strike again over pay

8 hrs ago

COLLEGES

EIS

EDUCATION

INDUSTRY

By Gabriel McKay@gabymckay Journalist

Share

No Comments

College lecturers on strike over pay

Renewed strikes could hit Scotland's colleges after lecturers voted to continue industrial action in a long-running pay dispute.

Members of the EIS-FELA (Education Institute for Scotland - Further Education Lecturers Association) union have been in dispute with pay body College Employers Scotland since 2022, which has brought both action short of a strike - including a boycott of results - and rolling strikes.

CES says it has offered an uplift of £5,000 over three years, and that this is £1,500 more than the Scottish Government's public sector pay policy (PPSP).

However, the union states that other public sector workers received pay settlements in 2022/23 and 2023/24 which were above PPSP in a period where there was record inflation and the offer on the table is not as good as given to other public sector workers.